Procedure:

Each student-teacher shall conduct an independent action research project on a school-based problem identified during their internship, under the close supervision of a faculty mentor. The research must involve real-time data collection, critical analysis, reflection, and the implementation of contextually relevant intervention strategies aimed at improving teaching-learning processes or school functioning. The procedure will include the following sequential stages:

1. Orientation: At the commencement of the semester, student-teachers shall undergo a structured orientation session designed to acquaint them with the foundational principles, nature, objectives, and methodologies of action research in education. This orientation will also cover ethical considerations and technical aspects of conducting field-based educational research.
2. Topic Selection: Students will engage in reflective discussions and consultations with assigned faculty member/mentor to identify a relevant and feasible researchable issue within the school setting. The selected topic must align with contemporary educational concerns and should have practical significance for improving classroom or school practices.
3. Topic Approval: Each proposed topic will be formally evaluated and approved by the College Research Committee (CRC) or an equivalent academic body. Upon approval, a Research Supervisor/Mentor will be officially assigned to each student for continuous academic and methodological support throughout the research process.

4. Research Proposal: Students are required to prepare a comprehensive research proposal. This proposal must be presented before the College Research Committee for constructive feedback and formal approval before proceeding to the research phase.
